

American Interprofessional Health Collaborative
Tracey Vause Earland, PhD, OTR/L, FNAP

The American Interprofessional Health Collaborative (AIHC) is pleased to announce the selection of Tracey Vause Earland, PhD, OTR/L, FNAP for the The AIHC Interprofessional Educator Award. 2024 award winners were announced and honored at the Nexus Summit as part of a virtual awards ceremony on October 1, 2024. The AIHC Interprofessional Educator Award is an annual award bestowed on a faculty member who demonstrates excellence in interprofessional teaching.

The American Interprofessional Health Collaborative (AIHC) is the professional community of the National Center for Interprofessional Practice and Education. AIHC consists of individuals who advance interprofessional education and collaborative practice to improve health outcomes and health equity, including, but not limited to students, practitioners, health professionals, educators, researchers, administrators, and community members. AIHC inspires colleagues and creates opportunities to come together, learn and grow. AIHC members work locally, nationally, and internationally to influence policy, develop and share best practice and resources, conduct research, mentor and support colleagues, and remove barriers to effective action.

The vision of the American Interprofessional Health Collaborative is "Health that is transformed through collaborations bridging practice and education."